The Girl Who Ran

- Generational Conflict:

The differing perspectives of Nana and Maami represent a generational divide regarding education and women's roles. Nana's dismissive attitude towards Adjoa's education contrasts sharply with Maami's desire for her daughter to have opportunities that she herself did not have. This conflict highlights how traditional views can clash with modern aspirations.

- Societal expectations and women's roles:

The story emphasizes the societal expectations placed on women, particularly concerning physical appearance and motherhood. Nana's fixation on Adjoa's legs reveal a traditional belief that a woman's worth is tied to her ability to bear children, reflected in her comments about needing solid hips. This expectation creates a sense of pressure on Adjoa, who wishes to be valued for her achievements, such as her talent in running rather than merely her appearance.
